APPENDICES

IN USING the Appendices the reader should give close heed to the paragraphs heading each list. No effort has been spared to make these lists correct and to relate them by references that gather in what may seem to be overlooked. The geographic arrangement of Appendix S is also a key to the listings in Appendices A to R. This volume constitutes a record for the end of the year 1938.

ART MUSEUMS

APPENDIX A

Roman type: Complete list of local public art museums, including art societies that are recognized as museums, but not including the many societies that have only occasional exhibitions. Given in a separate list following, but not in the main list, are community art centers established by the Works Progress Administration.

Italic type: Other museums (state, national, school, college, university, etc.) that give an important place to art. For complete lists of these classes see other appendices. For children's museums concerned with art see Appendix N, since only the three named as art museums (at Washington, D. C., Boston, Mass., and Duluth, Minn.) are referenced here.

Museums that include history, industry, or science, as well as art, have their fields indicated in parentheses, as (art. hist. ind. sci.). Archaeology museums are given here, and again in a supplementary list at the end of this appendix.

HISTORY MUSEUMS

APPENDIX B

Roman type: Complete list of local public history museums. Local and county historical societies are listed separately, following, although no distinction save that of name separates them as a class from public museums of history; state historical societies are given in a separate list in Appendix G.

Italic type: Other museums (state, national, school-system, college, university, private, etc.) that give an important place to history. For complete lists of these classes see other appendices. For all company museums see Appendix M; for children's museums, Appendix N; for historic house museums, Appendix O; for history museums in state and national parks, Appendix P.

Museums that include art, industry, or science, as well as history, have their fields indicated in parentheses.

HISTORICAL SOCIETIES

This is a list of local and county societies with museums; it does not include the many societies that do not as yet have exhibits. (For these see Historical Societies in the United States and Canada, published by the Conference of Historical Societies, Indianapolis, 1936.) No attempt is made to indicate here whether subjects other than history are treated, although most historical societies have some material that might equally well be assigned to art or industry, and many dabble in science; for a further note about this see the end of Appendix E.

In italics are societies concerned solely with historic house museums, that have their regular listing in Appendix O. Societies occupying old houses that are treated not as period houses, but merely as quarters for formal museums, are given here in Roman type and are italicized in Appendix O.

For state historical societies, see Appendix G.

INDUSTRY (APPLIED SCIENCE) MUSEUMS

APPENDIX C

Roman type: Local public industry, or applied science, museums; the three starred are of the new type discussed in Chapter V.

Italic type: Other museums (state and national) that give an important place to industry. For company museums see Appendix M.

Museums that include art, history, or science, as well as industry, have their fields indicated. Public museums of health and medicine are included here as special museums of applied science. For other medical museums see the introductory note of Appendix K.

Not listed here are various small museums and children's museums that touch only lightly on applied science; and historical societies (Appendix B), which customarily give some attention to the history of industry. Also see Appendix B for marine museums, whaling museums, and other near industry museums that emphasize history rather than technology.

SCIENCE (NATURAL HISTORY) MUSEUMS

APPENDIX D

Roman type: Complete list of local public science museums. Aquariums are not included, nor are zoos and botanical gardens except as they have museums.

Italic type: Other museums (state, national, school, school-system, college, university, private, etc.) that give an important place to science. For complete lists of these classes see other appendices. For all trailside museums in local, state, and national parks, see Appendix P.

Museums that include art, history, or industry, as well as science, have their fields indicated. Anthropology museums and planetariums are given here, and again in supplementary lists at the end of this appendix.

ANTHROPOLOGY MUSEUMS

Most science museums give some attention to archaeology and ethnology, and a few give a great deal of attention. The following science museums (which are included also in the foregoing list) are devoted wholly to these subjects. Roman and italic type have the same meaning as in the foregoing list.

For trailside museums of archaeology see Appendix P; and for art museums devoted wholly to archaeology or ethnology, the end of Appendix A.

PLANETARIUMS

The following planetariums are independent institutions, and are included in the main list of this appendix:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. Griffith Observatory
CHICAGO, ILL. Adler Planetarium and Astronomical Museum
PITTSBURGH, PA. Buhl Planetarium and Institute of Popular Science

The following planetariums are connected with the museums indicated:

SAN JOSE, CALIF. Rosicrucian Planetarium, Rosicrucian Egyptian Oriental Museum (general)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS. Seymour Planetarium, Museum of Natural History (science)
NEW YORK, N. Y. Hayden Planetarium, American Museum of Natural History (science)
PHILADELPHIA, PA. Fels Planetarium, Franklin Institute (industry)

GENERAL MUSEUMS

APPENDIX E

This is a list of local public museums devoted to two or more fields (art, history, industry, science) as indicated by abbreviations in parentheses. Museums including also archaeology or ethnology are not for that reason considered to be general, since these subjects are commonly treated to some extent in connection with history and art as well as science. All of the museums given here are referred to in appropriate foregoing appendices.

For general museums of other kinds see appendices as follows: historical societies (Appendix B, and see note at end of the present appendix); state museums (Appendix G); school-system museums (Appendix J); children's museums (Appendix N); and sub-museums (Appendices Q and R). Among college and university museums (Appendix K) there are many small general exhibits, but these tend to be broken up into separate teaching collections or departmental museums; the only large general museums of colleges or universities are those of Stanford University, Calif., Bowling Green, Ky., and Burlington, Vt. Other general museums are the U. S. National Museum (Appendix H) and the Yosemite Museum (Appendix P).

NOTE—

Most historical societies, properly, have material that could be treated as art or industry material; and some, less properly, dabble in science. The following societies, though indicated by name to be general, are classed as historical societies and included in Appendix B.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN. Bridgeport Scientific and Historical Society

- FRAMINGHAM CENTER, MASS. Framingham Historical and Natural History Society
GLOUCESTER, MASS. Cape Ann Scientific, Literary and Historical Association
SOUTH NATICK, MASS. South Natick Historical, Natural History and Library Society
UPPER SANDUSKY, OHIO. Wyandot County Historical and Archaeological Society
WILKES-BARRE, PA. Wyoming Historical and Geological Society
ALPINE, TEX. West Texas Historical and Scientific Society
MIDDLEBURY, VT. Sheldon Art Museum and Historical Society (Appendix O)

The following historical societies, also included in Appendix B, have developed strongly in two or more fields:

- WATERBURY, CONN. Mattatuck Historical Society (art. hist. sci.)
NEW YORK, N. Y. New York Historical Society (art. hist.)
GREENSBORO, N. C. Greensboro Historical Museum Society (hist. sci.)

PUBLIC MUSEUMS

APPENDIX F

The commonest form of museum control, by the board of a society or a self-perpetuating board of trustees, is characteristic of local public museums—for which see Roman type in Appendices A to E. This form of organization and the use of the term public museum are discussed in Chapter VI.

Some public museums have their controlling boards appointed by city or town authorities. These municipal museums are given with other public museums in Roman type in Appendices A to E, and they are segregated in the following list.

MUNICIPAL MUSEUMS

The following public museums are controlled by cities, either directly or through boards appointed by political authorities. For other kinds of city-controlled museums see school-system museums (Appendix J), and historic house museums (Appendix O). Many library exhibits and some other sub-museums (Appendices Q and R) are under city-controlled parent institutions, as are also public school museums (Appendix I).

Many public museums that are not controlled by cities do, however, occupy city-owned buildings under the partnership plan discussed in Chapter VI. This chapter also explains the status of several museums that are commonly, though incorrectly, supposed to be under city control.

STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETIES

The so-called state historical societies are a mixed group, administratively. Some are controlled by the state; some are affiliated with the state; some merely receive state appropriations; and some have no relations at all with the state although they are designated as state societies and are so recognized. All these categories are represented in the following list. For further information see Chapter VII.

The societies included here are only those with museums. In addition, there are state historical societies devoted solely to library and research activities in Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas, and Utah; and there are inactive societies in Michigan, Nevada, North Carolina, and Tennessee. States without state historical societies are Alabama, Arkansas, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS

APPENDIX H

The four museums under the Smithsonian Institution are those known as the national museums. However, there are many other museums controlled by the nation. Three of these located at Washington, and three army museums elsewhere, are given below. For others see historic house museums (Appendix O), national park museums (Appendix P), sub-museums (Appendix R), and the museums at Annapolis and West Point (Appendix K).

The many so-called federal art centers (Appendix A) are supported, in part, but not controlled by the nation. For the one exception to this (Washington, D. C.), see Appendix N.

SCHOOL-SYSTEM MUSEUMS

APPENDIX J

School-system museums are controlled by cities through their school boards. They serve many public schools of a city, and are distinguished in this way from school museums belonging to individual schools. For the latter, see Appendix I.

There are also some public museums (notably the one at Reading, Pa.) and five children's museums (those of Fort Wayne, Ind., Cambridge, Mass., Detroit, Mich., Duluth, Minn., and Oklahoma City, Okla.—see Appendix N) controlled by cities through school boards, and serving schools; but they are set off distinctly from school-system museums by their general character.

APPENDIX K

The principal museums are given by name (indented items), and their fields are indicated wherever the name leaves a doubt. Less important teaching collections and exhibits are shown only by abbreviations of their fields in italics following the name of the college or university. These collections are not all connected with the appropriate teaching departments; the history (hist.) classification, for example, includes numismatic collections exhibited in college libraries, church history collections in schools of theology, etc.

The abbreviation med. is used in this appendix only, and indicates museums of anatomy, pathology, and medicine. Other medical museums, by the way, are the Army Medical Museum (Appendix H), and the sub-museums of the Wellcome Research Institution in New York, the Cleveland Clinic, and the Zoological Society of Philadelphia (Appendix R). HISTORIC HOUSE MUSEUMS

APPENDIX O

Most items in the following list represent single structures, but some—like Spring Mill Village, Schoenbrunn, and Colonial Williamsburg—are for groups of houses. Only actual museum houses (places that have ceased to be homes, town halls, missions, or whatever they were originally, and have become exhibition places for the public to see as survivals from the past) are given—with the exception, however, of a few privately owned houses that are both residences and regular show places.

The nature of ownership (private, city, county, state, national) is indicated in parenthesis if it is not obvious from the name. Where the name is that of a society and the notation gives some other ownership such as (city), it means that the house is in custody of the society though owned by the city. Where there is no indication of ownership, the house is in the hands of trustees.

Italics show old houses occupied by museums but not treated as period houses—which, therefore, are not house museums.

NUMBER OF MUSEUMS

APPENDIX U

The following table, for continental United States as of the end of 1938, covers the museums given in the foregoing appendices, including the college and university collections represented in Appendix K by abbreviations (art. hist. sci. med.).

It will be seen that there are nearly 2,500 museums in the United States. However, this total makes no distinction between the largest museum and the smallest. Grouping by size of income is not satisfactory because, in the lower brackets, it brings poorly supported public museums together with the many small college museums and historic house museums that do not require much income. In order to get a clear picture, each group in the table must be considered by itself. Several of these are broken down by size of income in footnotes.

¹ There are 26 public museums with income of more than $100,000 in 1938; 77 with more than $25,000; 203 with more than $5,000; 453 with more than

$1,000. Of the 269 with less than $1,000 yearly, 200 are historical societies. These figures do not include state or national museums.

² Exclusive of historic house museums and trailside museums (which see).

³ There are 10 school museums and 94 college and university museums with income of more than $1,000 in 1938.

⁴ Exclusive of historic house museums (which see).

⁵ Including the 47 W. P. A. art centers listed separately at the end of Appendix A.

⁶ Including 295 local and county historical society museums.

⁷ Including 32 state historical society museums.

⁸ Or applied science.

⁹ Army Aeronautical Museum, Army Medical Museum (both of applied science).

¹⁰ Including 15 anthropology museums and 3 independent planetariums. See lists at the end of Appendix D.

¹¹ National Herbarium.

¹² Including 86 herbariums and 43 medical (anatomy and pathology) museums.

¹³ U. S. National Museum.

STATE AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

APPENDIX V

The following four tables have been prepared from information as to the number of museums in each area, total of operating incomes, and cost of buildings, with ratings for converted buildings and historic houses. These data were treated in several different ways and the results compared as a safeguard against serious error, and as a test for method. The numerical results are expressed in two forms: as coefficients showing how much one area has in comparison with another, and as ratios of coefficients to population showing how nearly one area lives up to its capacity compared with another. Coefficients indicate simply quantity; ratios indicate quantity per capita. These figures have no absolute meaning, they are significant only in relation to each other—that is, coefficient to coefficient or ratio to ratio. For convenience they are all converted into percentages, with the best taken as 100%. The lists are arranged in descending order of ratios. This sequence may not be exactly correct among states having nearly equal ratios.

Two of the tables are for 1930, and two are for 1935. During the five-year interval, the best state (New York) has increased in museum quantity by more than one-quarter (27%), and the best division (Middle Atlantic) by more than a third (39%). But the best record in each year is taken as 100%, and therefore a difference of percentage between the two years for any state or division represents only a catching up or a falling back in the general procession. The tables are discussed further in Chapter I, page 28, where some indication of developments since 1935 is given.

The ratios take no account of possible per capita difference between what should be expected of a thickly populated and of a thinly populated area.

COST OF MUSEUM BUILDINGS

APPENDIX W

The following tables show capital outlay for museum buildings, exclusive of land and equipment. Only buildings designed for museum purposes (see Appendix Y for chronological list) are represented. The figures do not include the cost of non-museum buildings occupied by museums, or the cost of remodeling such structures except in the few cases where remodeling gave practically a new museum; but the figures do include museum additions to buildings of any kind.

Only buildings in museum use at the end of 1938 are counted. For buildings of the past, see italicized items in Appendix Y.

Table 6 shows the growth of total investment, which is analyzed by years in Tables 7 and 8 and by states in Tables 9 and 10.
